How are you today?

I am sharing with you several tools that might be helpful as you go through your financial journey. These are financial calculators that I have gathered on my website, www.retirewithgary.com.

You certainly have the option to spend time and input data on your own. If it suits your interest, please reach out to me and we can set up a time to go through one or more of these calculations together.

It is a service that we are glad to provide to clients or perhaps even to a friend, neighbor, or relative you may know who might benefit.

With Thanks and Gratitude,

Gary Pawliczek

Could the Worst be Behind Us?

This has clearly been a challenging year for households. Stocks and bonds are both down significantly. Elevated food and gas prices continue to stretch budgets, and higher interest rates have increased borrowing costs. But we continue to see signs that the worst may be behind us. Gas prices are falling. Inflation pressures stemming from supply chain disruptions are easing. And the Federal Reserve (Fed) has taken these price increases seriously and is doing its job by raising short-term interest rates. While the Fed may still gradually increase rates throughout this year, it has already done a lot even as asset prices have come under increasing pressure.
